The Primary Advising & Degree Clearance Tool

Not long ago, the Degree Tracker tool was only used at the undergraduate level at the Oxford campus, Emory College, and the School of Business, and yet not as the official tool to manage routine academic activities.

But a key initiative by the Office of the University Registrar paired with schools’ need and collaboration to using Degree Tracker’s full-fledged functionalities facilitated the path for it to be the primary tool to complete critical advising as well as administrative functions.

The Degree Tracker team took this mission to heart and has been working with each school and department to implement a number of programs, majors, dual majors, concentrations, and tracks through consistent engagement & collaboration with each school.

The team’s effort came to fruition with Undergraduate Allied Health, Nursing, Laney, School of Public Health, School of Theology and recently School of Law coming onboard to using Degree Tracker in the last two-three years with only SOM remaining to come full circle, although every single program may not have gone live with the tool in each school.

In Collaboration

Parallel to our commitment to implement and promote Degree Tracker as the main advising and degree clearance tool, what made a significant difference is also Schools’ increasing interest in the tool.

With the Office of the University Registrar eyeing Spring 2023 as the semester when departments will officially begin using Degree Tracker to clear their students, schools are complementing this effort by actively engaging with the Degree Tracker team to revamp Degree Tracker configurations, reporting mechanisms and overall functional efficiencies that are designed to make the transition as smooth as possible.
