Even More Schools & Plans Going Live with Degree Tracker

With the need for Degree Tracker growing and momentum of implementing it building across the various schools within Emory, the tool is evolving to be more a necessity than a preference. To that effect, Laney Graduate School's certain programs, Rollins School of Public Health and Political Science plans and sub-plans can now be tracked using the Degree Tracker tool.

This provides users the ability to streamline a number of their routine academic processes from early course selection to graduation. While the Office of the University Registrar - Degree Tracker Team leads the effort of integrating the use and support of this tool, at the core of these successful implementations lie the aspiration and collaboration of our stakeholders in each School and Program for whose support we are very much indebted to.

What-If: Simulating the Endless Possibilities

The current environment requires new as well as returning students to adjust to several changes in the teaching and learning process. Particularly for those who have yet to learn about the various majors/minors and tracks across the university, and decide what area to pursue, it could be a lot to absorb.

Degree Tracker’s What-If function is a feature that facilitates the search and structures the decision making process by way of simulating what dwells in students’ aspirations. It also aids the role academic advisors play in supporting students with this process as it provides a tangible report to refer to.

New Admin Dashboard Functionality to be Introduced to Schools/Departments

The office of the University Registrar in collaboration with a consulting company is currently working to implement an exciting feature that enables departments to have analytics dashboard based off of data from the Degree Tracker.

This functionality is designed to address general data needs by administrators and provides quick insights that facilitate informed decision making. In a few clicks, users will be able to indicate their inquiries and review the results and corresponding charts in no time. Stay tuned for more on this as the project progresses.
